smallbizlibrarian Rode by @butterlovebakeshop on Balboa between 38th and 39th Avenues on Sunday and put on the brakes when we saw the cute storefront. The almond cookie was so good I almost forgot to take a picture of it! The chocolate chip cookie was still warm and fresh even though it was near closing time. 🚫 💚 #sfsmallbizlove smallbizlibrarian I bought salmon fillets and spicy Italian sausages at Little City Market today. If you come when it's a little busy, you can overhear some of the neighborhood gossip. This is the kind of family-ru business that gives you fresh herbs from their garden when you're roasting chicken AGAIN and printout of their family recipes in case you've never made corned beef before. 1400 Stockton Street at Vallejo #NorthBeach #sfsmallbizlove smallbizlibrarian VJ Grocery at Clay and Taylor Streets is my source for non-winning lottery tickets and pints of ice cream. Low-key famous due to being in the film, Bullitt, where Steve McQueen would buy his TV dinners by the armload. My best friend knows the family who lives in Bullitt's apartment across the street. And the woman who works here knows my aunt who used to teach grammar school. #smallworld

Bringing $100 million to 1,000 SBDC initiative to connect Black-

businesses with capital

Northern CA - Looking to take a bite out of COVID losses and rebuild a suffering segment of the economy, The Inclusivity Project launches today with the goal of securing $100 million for 1,000 Black-owned businesses.

It's been estimated that half of the nation's Black entrepreneurs have been forced out of business by COVID-related circumstances, but Chris Horton isn't taking that lying down. A finance expert for the nonprofit organization Northern California Small Business Development Centers (Norcal SBDC), Horton is leading a new initiative to reach and help Black small business owners level the playing field when it comes to working capital.

The Inclusivity Project is an initiative of the Norcal SBDC network, in affiliation with the Norcal Financial Development Corporation (Norcal FDC)
