Explore 'home' through the voices of Salvadoran poets as part of the national initiative, Latino Poetry: Places We Call Home.

Leticia Hernández-Linares hosts a panel of Salvadoran writers, featuring Claudia Castro Luna (Seattle, WA), M.K. Chávez (Oakland, CA), and Alexandra Lytton-Regalado (El Salvador), reading their work and discussing themes like home, eco-consciousness and gentrification.

- Claudia Castro Luna is a former WA State Poet Laureate and author of Cipota Under the Moon and Killing Marías.
- M.K. Chávez is a writer recognized for exploring mixed-race identity and environmental resilience.
- Leticia Hernández-Linares is a writer and educator based in the Mission District, San Francisco.
- Alexandra Lytton Regalado is a Salvadoran-American poet and author of Relinquenda.

Latino Poetry: Places We Call Home is a major public humanities initiative, planned for 2024–25, that celebrates and explores the multifaceted legacy of Latino poetry. It is directed by Library of America and funded with generous support from the National Endowment for the Humanities and Emerson Collective.
