San Francisco Public Library

A Guiding Hand

It was three summers ago,
That I came to San Francisco.
Such a strange and scary land I did find,
After a most comforting hometown I left behind.

I searched high and low, left and right,
But there was nothing familiar in sight.
New faces, new languages, even the summer was old.
Anything warm and solid onto which I could hold?

The library, the public library of San Francisco,
It cheered me up when my spirits were low.
The quietness in it and the smell of so many a book
All so comforting and yet exciting I quietly took.

Culture, geography, history, and language,
From all these I derive wisdom and courage.
Oh, it is such a strong and solid hand,
That assures and guides me in this
Wonderful land.
